4.1 The Load Sequence - Arm Every Station Before You Send

Elite private strategy - not for redistribution

WAR-ROOM NOTES - 4.1 The Load Sequence

THE LOAD SEQUENCE IS A GATE, NOT A SUGGESTION

The seven gates exist because every gate has an acute failure mode that quietly kills a campaign: a dead EPK link (proof fails), an info@ address (message dies in a queue), a 90-pitch written for the wrong station (personalization fails), no local story (risk fails), no next action scheduled (follow-up fails). Amateurs treat the gates as optional prep. Operators treat them as the actual work - the send is just the trigger.

THE SCORE-ORDERED FIRING SEQUENCE (WHY IT WINS)

The compounding logic: your first adds are the proof for the next wave. If you start with 10 A-tier stations and convert 5, those 5 receipts are not just adds - they're a stronger payload for the 10 B-tier stations that follow in the same campaign. Firing by score maximizes the proof available for the later, colder targets. Enthusiasts fire alphabetically. Operators fire in order of warmth.

THE TWO-DAY WINDOW IS A DISCIPLINE, NOT A RULE

The load sequence protects you from the excitement trap: the 90-minute blast that produces 20 sent emails and zero logged systems. A two-day load with a day-three audit turns an adrenaline spike into a scheduled operation. The trigger finger waits - the machine moves.

THE BLOCKER BOARD IS THE CAMPAIGN'S REAL KPI

A healthy campaign has exactly one blocker board: who does what, by when. The most common blockers in the wild: unverified contact (address), missing local story (no dates), and a dead EPK link. Fix the top 3 blockers and 80% of stations clear the gates. Most artists don't have a blocker board - they have a feelings board. Don't.

THE GATE-7 RECEIPT (UNDERUSED AND DEADLY)

Gate seven ensures the station has a reason to be in your inbox next month - a receipt file, a past reply, an add, a relationship note. If a station clears gates one through six but has zero history with you, it enters wave one anyway - but with lower expectations. Gate seven is how you build the 90-day ally engine (Module 5.4) from day one.
